Scott County Indiana Business & Industry: Technical Offices

Indiana's adoption of state-of-the-art telecommunications legislation has led to major new investments in broadband and fiber optics across the state. The City of Scottsburg offers wireless broadband service that is ultra fast, reliable and secure.

The region enjoys a concentration of high-end talent in IT — with particular strength in communications services, computer integration and application services.

Key to our success is the collaborative relationship between industry, universities, and government which all unite in our technology initiative. The Scott County Economic Development Corporation provides specialized assistance for companies seeking business location information about Scott County, Indiana -- including networking with local businesses and universities, and data collection.

Technological Incentives

The IDOC, in partnership with the Department of Workforce Development, created the Technology Enhancement Certifications of Hoosiers (TECH) Fund to help Indiana businesses train their existing information technology professionals. The maximum award to any one company is $50,000 and can be used for costs associated with a company's IT professionals earning recognized certifications in areas including: systems administrations, systems engineering, and software development.
